State of Sales Kickoff Meetings

An examination of how (and how successfully) companies motivate and align their sales forces

A survey by Brainshark
Overview: State of Sales Kickoffs

Trying to drive motivation, morale, momentum and results with your annual sales kickoff (SKO) meeting? Many companies may be falling short, according to our State of Sales Kickoff Meetings survey. Despite billions of dollars spent on these events annually (not to mention hours upon hours of preparation), three out of four attendees (74%) say their company’s SKO doesn’t merit an “A” grade, with 29% rating it a “C” grade or below – leaving ample room for improvement.

What’s causing companies to lose out on maximizing their events’ ROI? One item we found is that many organizations structure and plan their SKOs as isolated events – rather than springboards for the entire fiscal year – and neglect to prepare their sales team, pre-SKO, or follow up afterward. For example, 84% of organizations don’t conduct sales rep training in advance of their SKO for context, and 71% don’t deliver post-work or follow-up training to reinforce what was learned. A surprising 42% of participants said they wished their company would integrate their SKO’s theme and messaging into the rest of the year.

For this study, we surveyed 107 sales representatives, sales managers and other leadership at companies of all sizes and across industries. The survey covered their experiences and impressions at SKOs they’ve attended, including salient areas executed well, along with items for improvement. Full results are in this exclusive report. Enjoy!
Overall SKO Impressions

Do SKOs “Make the Grade”?

Participants saw room for improvement in the kickoffs they’ve attended:

- 3 out of 4 (74%) say their company’s SKO, as a whole, doesn’t merit an “A” grade
- 29% give their company’s SKO a “C” grade or below
- In terms of individual SKO components, social/networking activities got the most favorable grades (35% rated them an “A”)
- Keynote presentations fared worst (only 16% graded them an “A”)

SKO Planning

Sales enablement’s role

As more organizations establish sales enablement (SE) programs, functions and titles, sales enablement departments can – and should – play an active role in the holistic SKO process.

- Overall, 43% of respondents noted their company has a SE function that supports their SKOs.
- Among companies with SE functions, though, this percentage was much higher – nearly 8 out of 10 SE departments (79%) supported SKO planning and execution within their organization.

Elements included (and lacking)

Still, many organizations take a limited approach to SKO planning – approaching the kickoff as a single event in isolation:

- More than 6 out of 10 (62%) don’t deliver pre-work to sales reps in advance of their SKO.
- 84% don’t conduct training in advance, neglecting to provide a foundation on the skills and topics that will be covered.
- 7 in 10 (71%) don’t deliver post-work or follow-up training as reinforcement.
- 28% don’t make presentation slides available post-SKO.

- Training is conducted before SKO: 16%
- Training is conducted on-site at SKO: 74%
- Certifications are done on-site at SKO: 7%
- Post-work and follow-up training are delivered after SKO: 29%
- Presentation slides are made available post-SKO: 72%
- Presentations are recorded and available on-demand post-SKO: 25%
SKO Improvements

What’s on the ‘Wish-List’?

Sales reps and executives desired multiple improvements to drive better SKO effectiveness and ROI. Not surprisingly, these underscored a desire to treat the meetings as much more than point-in-time training and motivational tools – but, rather, as catalysts for the entire fiscal year. Suggestions included:

• Provide training and/or coaching prior to the event (41%)
• Follow up SKO training with ongoing reinforcement (62%)
• Follow through on using the kickoff theme and messages the rest of the year (42%)

If respondents had unlimited planning power and no restrictions on budget, they’d also improve items including:

• The SKO’s guest sales-focused speakers (56%)
• SKO motivational speakers (50%)
• The venue (39%)
• Food options (23%)
